

LSGI Excellence in Teaching Award 2014/15

Dr. Charles Wong (left) and Mr. Kent Lam (right) received the certificates from Prof. John Shi.

We are pleased to announce that Dr. Charles Wong, Assistant Professor and Mr. Kent Lam, Teaching Fellow are the awardees of LSGI Excellence in Teaching Award in 2014/15.

There are 2 awardees being awarded this year as the selection committee considered that both performance and dedication on teaching and learning are very impressive in various aspects. They have also received positive comments from colleagues and students.

Dr. Charles Wong has demonstrated impressive e-learning development and excellent contribution to the teaching culture in the University by successfully developing two Small Private Online Course (SPOC) on Remote Sensing and proposing the department-wide MOOC. He has also developed pedagogical method for supervising undergraduate and postgraduate students, contributed in course management, and strived to connect potential employers to channel career opportunities for students.

Mr. Kent Lam has been very dedicated to the programme and curriculum in LSGI. He has put great effort on designing the integration of BIM curriculum into the GIS programme, reviewing and improving teaching and learning methods and materials of his taught subjects. In addition, he has been putting much effort on developing student exchange channels with international universities and the promotional activities.

Congratulations to Charles and Kent!
